PUT THE COLONEL ON THE WORKS

If Germany carries out her announced intention of not making war on the United States, there is likely to be a decided sag in our enthusiasm within a very short time.

In this age, accustomed as we are to shocks and thrills, explosions and sensations, there is a constant appetite for the unusual and any event or episode or propaganda, regardless of its proportions, which does not yield daily food for the inflamed imagination of the public must soon give way to something else, less important, perhaps, but for the moment more mentally intoxicating.

Whether Germany attacks us or not, the need for a tremendous defensive army is imperative, for no man can say what the future holds for either America or Europe, and so well identified has America become with the world at large that anything affects mankind Dillon. in general must give us grave concern.

It is evident that the young men of the United States are not yet convinced that their nation is in immediate peril. They do not see opportunity for big fighting or stirring adventure. The humdrum of camp life, without prospect of excitement in the face of an enemy, does not make the blood run riof. Under present conditions, if an army of a million is to be recruited, the draft must be resorted to. That is realized at Washington. Army officers know it and the President is at last convinced of it.

In the absence of immediate prospect for war operations at home there is but one way to enliven the interest so far as America's part is concerned and that is to give authority to some virile figure like Roosevelt to raise a division for service in France.

If the President will give Colonel Roosevelt a Major General's commission and put him into the field with power to raise an army and take the Stars and Stripes to Europe, this will create more enthusiasm and do more to inject activity in all of our preparations for defense than anything that could happen except invasion by a foreign foe.

It is noted by today's dispatches that Colonel Roosevelt is to have a conference with President Wilson with this end in view and it is to be hoped that the plan will succeed. There are thousands of Gordon Grover, were in Mt. Olivet young men in the United States who would volunteer for service in Tuesday afternoon France. This is well indicated by the number of volunteers who have joined the Canadian regiments and are now fighting under foreign

The average young man whose nature is responsive to the call cemetery. to arms wants to see prospects of "things doing." He will not enlist for police duty nor will he volunteer to follow some tin soldier on dress parade. Surrounding a man like Roosevelt he sees the romance of war and begins to breathe the atmosphere which brought forth the vision of the "Three Guardsmen," and when such a leader sounds the bugle, the "boys" spring to their saddles and ride away, eager for the brilliancy and dash of the battlefield and hungry for even the hardships of war.

We have the men, we have the money and we will get the ships and guns. Put a real soldier like Wood or Roosevelt at the head of the American Legion and then watch the campfires as they begin the beginning to the end, about a mile. to burn on every hill.-Lexington Leader.

WAR BONDS BILL

Will Be Passed in the House of Representatives Today—Partisan Spirit Absent in Debate.

Washington, April 13-Eight hours of debate on the $7,000,000,000 war revenue bill in the House today developed so little opposition that passage of it tomorrow by an almost unanimous vote became a certainty. Action in the Senate probably will follow early next

When the House adjourned at 7 closed and the leaders had agreed to Jacksonville and Tallahassie, Fla. begin discussion of amendments under the five-minute rule at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. Representative Lenroot, of Wisconsin, and others insisted today that without these limitations the Secretary of the Treasury might make loans to European neutrals immediately or continue loans to other countries after the close of the war.

Framers of the bill insisted that such a course never would be considered, but they finally agreed to insert the specific provision.

Absence of partisan spirit marked the debate. Democratic Leader Kitchin and Representative Fordney, of Michigan, who for years had battled from opposite sides of the House on financial questions, particularly the tariff, were the principal supporters of the measure. Efforts to inject political discussions into the debate and swerve the leaders off on the tariff and other issues were unavailing. They went straight ahead, urging always the necessary of immediate action.

Attention accorded the speakers was unusual. Scores of questions were propounded to them and keenest interest was displayed in the intricacies of the measure.

An ovation was accorded Mr. Kitchin when he opened debate in behalf of the bill. He explained that the measure carried a proposed bond issue of $5,000,000,000, out of the proceeds of which $3,000,000,000 was to be loaned to the Allies with their bonds as security, the remaining $2,bonds to be added to the proceeds of Banner.' a proposed $2,000,000,000 certificate of indebtedness issue and expended in at the Washington Opera House to the prosecution of the war by the United States.
